SOCHUM Global Emergence of Counter Culture, New Left and Anti-War Movement

West Germany is well aware of what wars can cause and realizes the importance of the youth to live in a peaceful world. In the past couple of years, we have been working to leave a great world for the youth, however, our efforts have been mostly unsuccessful. As anti-war protests are for a good cause, they can cause chaos in the nation and to prevent the chaos, we have proposed emergency laws. These laws however were also unsuccessful as they faced opposition from civil liberties advocates and the anti-authoritarian movement. There have been clashes between police and protesters, but we are well aware of the need to protest the wars and the government will not let these clashes happen again.

During the current state, the youth is protesting wars and we are trying to support them. Even though we support the USA in the cold war, we do not support the Vietnam War and we are trying to engage with the concerns of the new generation. The government is attempting to talk with protesters and address the cultural and social issues. We are putting effort to reform the educational system to match the needs of the new era.

We propose that UN member states also try to communicate with their younger generation and try to meet their expectations. Using violence against protesters isn't the solution as it removes hope from the activists, protesters, the younger generation and anyone involved with any wars, or people that support countercultural movement. We should make sure UN states try to implement new laws or make changes in their social and cultural system in order to increase the living standards and human rights.
