Agenda Item: Reconstruction and Development in Post-Conflict Regions

The Argentine Republic is a state located in South America with people of different origins. Its population is 45.8 million. Thanks to its production of soybeans, wheat, and meat, Argentina is the second-largest economy in South America. Argentina places great importance on social justice and human rights and makes strong efforts to protect civilians during armed conflicts, which weaken states and deprive people of their rights. This is one of Argentina's main priorities.

Today, 437 million children live in conflict zones, and 47.2 million children have been forcibly displaced. These figures show how serious the problem is. The United Nations emphasizes the importance of protecting civilians, ending colonialism, and achieving social peace. For this reason, Argentina is open to all forms of cooperation and supports the work of the UN. The country works to improve reconstruction and development in post-conflict regions by organizing negotiations and providing support to conflict-affected areas.

Argentina contributed to the adoption of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 in 2000 and calls for an end to armed conflicts. Argentina remains committed to international law, peaceful conflict resolution, and the principles set out in UN resolutions such as Resolution 1514 (XV). Argentina supports sending more experts to avoid conflicts. It also supports mediation and negotiation as tools to prevent civil wars and armed conflicts. In addition, Argentina supports education, health, and infrastructure projects in post-conflict regions and emphasizes special protection for women and children. Argentina calls on the United Nations to strengthen international law and promote lasting peace through regional cooperation.
