Agenda Item: Addressing the Strategic Implications of China's Expanding Global Influence

Denmark is a small but developed country in Northern Europe and a part of Scandinavia. Denmark consists of the Jutland Peninsula and its islands. Its capital is Copenhagen. Denmark was once one of the most powerful kingdoms in Europe. Today, it is governed by a constitutional monarchy and parliamentary democracy. The country's strong economy is based on trade, agriculture, and renewable energy (especially wind). Education and healthcare are free in Denmark. People living in Denmark enjoy a high standard of living. This is why the Danes are among the happiest people in the world. Most people living in Denmark are Danish, but the country boasts a diverse culture because many people come from other countries. Denmark protects equality, culture, society, the environment, and people. Denmark is a member of the European Union and actively works with global organizations such as the United Nations and NATO.

In recent years, China has increased its power in many areas, including trade, technology, and military. This growth began quickly after China began international trade in the late 1970s. Today, China is a strong power on the Asian continent and holds an important place in global politics by starting trade routes to Asia, Africa, and Europe. European Union members work together to make sure that China does not make unfair economic and political pressure on our population. Denmark is a member of NATO and the EU. It keeps peaceful relationships with China and supports fair international trade with NATO, of which it is a member. The United Nations has discussed China's actions on global issues such as trade justice and human rights. In the past, the United Nations has made sure to keep of peace, respect for the rule of law, and the protection of the rights of small nations. Denmark supports these international issues and works with other countries to ensure a balanced and peaceful global order.

Denmark is worried about China's growing power. This could cause a global problem. To address these issues, Denmark supports cooperation through the United Nations. We support the United Nations' support for global projects such as fair trade and peace, presenting them clearly and plainly. Also, Denmark wants to strengthen cooperation between Asia, Europe, and Africa to share knowledge and reduce the unfair pressure of powerful countries. global projects that could affect smaller countries' freedom. Regular talks with China and other countries can help solve problems peacefully. Finally, smaller nations should get help to protect their economies and resources from unfair influence.
