Agenda Item: Reducing Inequalities in Digital Education

France is located in Western Europe and the capital of France is Paris. France's current population is around 66 million. The main language spoken is French, and the currency used is euro. The main principles Republic of France has held onto since revolution and is known for are "freedom, equality and fraternity" which was an honorable example to the other countries, affecting the whole world by declaring the rights of men and citizens.

France, a founding member of UNESCO, prioritizes education, culture, science, information and communication in its domestic and international policies. UNESCO and France are working in close partnership across all major programmes, but especially focused on education. France supports access to quality education for all girls, by including gender-related issues in the design and implementation of educational policies such as proper health and hygiene facilities, teacher training on gender issues and much more.

French cities participate in national committees to better coordinate and expand lifelong learning opportunities for all citizens. France actively collaborates with UNESCO through various projects and initiatives. France calls for reform of education financing worldwide, advocating for more equitable, sufficient, and effective funding for education globally.

Unfortunately, education everywhere around the world isn't equal. Most children can't receive proper education without struggle or at all. Online education can be complicated because not everyone has the wealth to pay for expensive educational services and devices. France and the UN can work together to develop and provide accessible internet to regions that lack it. France can donate money to distribute affordable technological devices to those in need. In addition, these devices will come with free pre-programmed educational applications. Also, increased collaboration between UN agencies will speed up processes with communication and several different ideas. Regardless of wealth or situation, every child deserves equal educational opportunities.
