

Country: Australia

Committee: SPECPOL

Topic: Reconstruction and Development in Post-Conflict Regions

Australia is known for its post-war development efforts in the Asia-Pacific region and for being the world's sixth-largest country. The reason it is so well known for post-war development is the agreements it made with large and well-known countries. Examples of these agreements include the ANZUS agreement with the USA and New Zealand, and the agreements it made with the United States and its neighbors.

When a country comes out of a war, economic crises occur and basic needs such as food and healthcare may become difficult to access. For these reasons, life and survival become harder. Australia helps the countries it has agreements with in return for certain conditions, and this has become an important part of Australia's foreign policy. To overcome such situations, Australia applies several measures. These include helping small businesses grow and supporting people in various ways to improve their lives.

As a result, Australia is a country that has gained recognition because of what it has done and continues to do.

REFERENCES

US Department Of State: Anzus treaty

World Bank: post-conflict development reports

DFAT: publications