France is a country located in Western Europe and is known for its rich culture, history and democratic values. The capital city is Paris and the population is around 67 million people. France is one of the leading nations in science, art and education. France plays an important role in the United Nations and is a founding member of many global organizations, like the European Union. France works hard to support peace, good education, and protection of human rights around the world.

Violence and bullying affect millions of children around the world, both in schools and online. These problems can harm children's physical and mental health. United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund works to ensure that every child grows up in a safe place. France also believes that all children must be protected, no matter their background, gender or nationality. The country supports UNICEF programs that prevent bullying and help children affected by violence. Various announcements and raising adults' awareness about violence are some of the programs carried out by UNICEF. As a member of the European Union and UN, France has introduced many laws to protect children. France has national programs that fight school bullying and improve online safety in France. The penalties for violence against children are severe, and physical punishment in schools is not allowed at all. France believes that protecting children from violence and bullying is essential for building a peaceful and just future for all.

France considers it very important to prevent bullying and any form of violence against children and therefore we are ready to take measures on both national and international levels. Starting with raising further awareness and providing proper preventive education, we are ready to contribute with other countries and international organizations as well, to protect all children around the world from any form of harm.
