Agenda Item: Economic Policies Supporting Sustainable Development

France is a country in Western Europe, known for its culture, history, and strong role in international affairs. It is one of the founding members of the United Nations and a permanent member of the Security Council. France believes that sustainable development is very important for the future of our planet. Economic growth must be done in a way that helps protect the environment, supports social equality, and reduces poverty. France supports the UN's 2030 Agenda and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and believes that smart economic policies are key to making these goals a reality.

France has already taken many steps to support sustainable development. For example, we have a green budget and we invest in renewable energy like wind and solar power. We also support clean transportation and recycling industries to create jobs while protecting the environment. France has passed laws to reduce carbon emissions and to make sure natural resources are used in a responsible way. These actions show how economic policy can work together with environmental and social goals.

Internationally, France wants to work with other countries to support fair and sustainable growth. Through our development agency (AFD), we help developing countries by funding education, healthcare, clean energy, and gender equality projects. France also supports fair trade and debt relief for poorer countries. To improve global sustainability, France suggests four main ideas: more investment in green technology, fair carbon pricing, better access to education and digital tools in developing countries, and strong partnerships between governments and businesses. France believes that by working together, we can build a more equal and sustainable future for all.
