

Position paper

Comitee: Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC)

Country: United Kingdom

Topic: Combating Child Labor and Promoting Fair Opportunities for Youth

Delegate Name: Demir Bayraktar

Introduction

United Kingdom is a globally influential nation with significant scientific, technological and cultural contributions. The United Kingdom is a country that has influenced the world scientifically, technologically and culturally. They have a well established economy that is a reason why they're in the economically advanced country in the world, and the prosperous natural resources and complementary workforce.

Combating Child Labor and Promoting fair Opportunities for Youth

The United Kingdom strictly prohibits child labor and enforces comprehensive regulations to protect minors. They don't let people under the age 13 work. After the age 13, you can work halftime a day and after you leave school, than you can work 40 hours a week. United Kingdom has strong regulations for this, if you're in the age 13, 14 or 15, you can work less then 18 hours a week if there's school. You can only work 3 hours if there's school. If you work and you're in the age that I said, you can work 5 or 6 days a week but it can't get over from 18 hours. At weekend, you can be employed maximum 8 hours a week. If it's school break (like summer break), you can work 40 hours a week. 8 hours a day. You can maximum work until 7 pm. Under the age 13, they cannot work a job that gets money, but there is exceptions (like family jobs, babysitting, and delivering newspapers). For the world, all nice and well intentioned people will think the people who has been hurt because of the lack of justice. Over one hundred and nineteen country's has been ratified The Convention On The Rights Of The Child. Human needs to think every body starts their life as a baby, and child an then adult. Can the world just stop one second an think, weren't all the people live in the world was a child too? Nobody borned as an adult. So think the childhood past, and today's childhood. There are diffrences, that's right. But there is an important thing. It doesn't matter which year the world live in, there is always a child living in world.

Solutions and Conclusion

United Kingdom has not ratified The Convention On The Rights Of The Child. There's another organization to protect the rights of the child. Unicef. While concepts such as equal opportunity, justice, and fundamental rights are often emphasized, their true significance becomes clear only when nations actively uphold these principles through concrete policies. If people don't know how the country's do about universal things, equality or justice, the world cannot solve problems or find solutions. Except United Kingdom and Somali, every country has said "Yes" for The Convention On The Rights Of The Child. But they also have their own robust opinion on justice. The world believes justice is always there, with someone, something, but always there, and all the country's agree in this point.

References: Cia Factbook, Google, Safari, ECOSOC original website