The Republic of Djibouti is a republic located in east Africa in the horn of Africa region. The Republic of Djibouti has borders with the State of Eritrea, Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia and Federal Republic of Somalia. Djibouti is the capital city of the Republic of Djibouti. The Republic of Djibouti's population is estimated to be around 1.200.000 and nearly half of this population lives in Djibouti. The Republic of Djibouti has an important location near international sea routes. The economy of Djibouti mainly depends on ports, trade, and services. The country has limited natural resources, but it cooperates with other countries and international organizations. French and Arabic are the official languages of the Republic of Djibouti. The country has different cultures and traditions. Despite economic challenges, Djibouti works to improve development and social stability.

The Republic of Djibouti is a united nations member state that upholds the core principles of the United Nations and it acknowledges the importance of women's rights for a better future. In this regard, Djibouti supports the objectives of UNWomen in promoting gender equality, empowering women and girls, and enhancing women's participation in social, economic, and political decision making processes. The Republic of Djibouti recognizes that the advancement of women's rights is essential for sustainable development and remains committed to cooperating with international mechanisms to address existing challenges in this field.

The Republic of Djibouti believes that women should have better access to education and job opportunities. Education and work help women become stronger and more independent. In addition, social and cultural barriers should be reduced in a respectful way. By respecting national traditions, Djibouti aims to improve the protection of women's rights and support gender equality in the MENA region.
