

Committee: Special Political And Decolonization (SPECPOL)

Topic: The status of ISIS-affiliated people in displacement camps

Country: Canada

As we know, the ISIS terrorist organization has been a major problem for the countries of the world since 1999. This group, which is mainly active in Iraq and Syria, has camps for 70 thousand people in these regions where their families stay. Unfortunately, the living conditions of the women and children in these camps are not very encouraging, but nobody hears the people's cries for help. Those who leave the camps of ISIS, which are still carrying out active attacks in many countries, are also returning to their own countries. Although each country has a different policy, most countries around the world still keep people from the camps in prison because they may have connections with ISIS.

A Canadian woman has been released from a camp for ISIS detainees in northeast Syria on the weekend, a lawyer representing her family said on Monday. The woman, believed to have left for Syria in 2014, was taken to Erbil in northern Iraq, setting the stage for her return to Canada. She is the first Canadian adult to leave the makeshift camps and prisons for suspected ISIS members captured in Syria during the conflict.

As the Canadian government, we think that ISIS is hurting a lot of communities in the middle east. Immigration of the middle eastern people is a threat to the more advanced countries' economies and demographical architecture. the displacement camps are harming Iraqi people.

As the Canadian government's solution, we like to offer that more refugee camps and a better living situation in these camps. we can give the people economic help and make sure that the living situations are up to UN standards.

