Agenda Item: Reconstruction and Development in Post-Conflict Regions

As the representative of the Global South and the world's largest democracy, the Republic of India views post-conflict reconstruction not merely as an economic necessity, but as a moral imperative to ensure regional stability. India is bordering countries such as Nepal, Pakistan, China and more. India is currently 4th strongest country in the world according to the World Power Index.

The destruction of critical and non-critical infrastructure during conflicts leaves long-lasting scars on society which limits access to education, weakens healthcare systems, and harms economies. Rebuilding is therefore essential not only for restoring normal life but also for rebuilding trust and social unity among affected populations. Roads reconnect communities, schools educate future generations, and hospitals save lives. Guided by the principles of South-South Cooperation, India draws on its own development experience to assist partner nations by sharing technical expertise rather than relying only on financial aid. With a long history of supporting post-conflict reconstruction and having emerged from a colonial past. India supports stronger international cooperation through the United Nations, regional organizations, and partners to provide financial support and reconstruction assistance. India also emphasizes climate-resilient infrastructure to strengthen societies against future crises. India calls for integrated psychosocial rehabilitation programs to address trauma, promote reconciliation, and foster lasting social unity.

In conclusion, India reaffirms its commitment to inclusive, sustainable and coordinated post conflict rebuilding. Rebuilding infrastructure is not just a technical task but a responsibility. India stands to work with all nations to restore dignity, trust and strength in societies coming from conflicts. Our solution is to make local institutions powerful, making sure about transparency and the involving local communities guarantees that recovery is sustainable and meets needs of people in need. As a member of United Nations, India believes that rebuilding must be guided by rules, partnership and shared responsibility.
